The Feast of the Dedication of the Lateran Basilica

This weekend, we celebrate the 1,701st anniversary of the Dedication of The Lateran Basilica in Rome, the first Christian Basilica built explicitly to gather the entire city around its bishop, although Christians had already started to build churches before then. The Lateran Basilica is honored as:

- The Mother and Head of All the Churches in the City and the World (Omnium Ecclesiarum Urbis et Orbis Mater et Caput - the inscription that greets pilgrims at the entrance of the Basilica, expressing its unity with the entire Catholic Church)
- The Cathedral of Rome; the episcopal seat (the cathedra) of the pope as bishop of Rome. Even today, the offices of the Diocese of Rome are in the Lateran Palace, a building just behind the basilica.
- The oldest of the four major papal basilicas in Rome, the four most highly ranked churches:
 - Archbasilica of St. John Lateran
 - Basilica of St. Mary Major
 - Basilica of St. Peter (in Vatican City)
 - Basilica of St. Paul Outside the Walls
- Residence of the popes from the 4th to the 14th century.
- Site of five ecumenical councils.

An Unusual Liturgical Day

The dedication anniversary of every cathedral is a feast day for all the churches in that diocese. As the Lateran is the cathedral of Rome, it is a feast day for the entire Church, celebrated everywhere.

In fact, the feast of the Dedication of St. John Lateran is of such great importance that it outranks a Sunday in Ordinary Time when it falls on a Sunday, as it does this year.

Who Is St. John Lateran?

It's an excellent Catholic trivia question: Who is St. John Lateran?

It's a trick question. There is no such saint. The Lateran basilica—the mother church of the whole world—was suitably dedicated to Christ the Savior on November 9th in 324.

Much later, in the 10th century, a dedication was added to St. John the Baptist, and another dedication in the 12th century added St. John the Evangelist.

Thus, its official name is a mouthful: The Papal Archbasilica of the Most Holy Savior and Saints John the Baptist and the Evangelist in the Lateran. This is simplified in common parlance to St. John Lateran or The Lateran Basilica.

“The Lateran” takes its name from the family historically associated with land; the complex of buildings on the site was known as the palace of the Laterani family, a high-ranking family in service to several Roman emperors.

During the first Christian centuries, when the Church was illegal, formal structures were difficult to establish. That changed with Constantine, who, early in the fourth century, first legalized Christianity and then gave it official favor. The Lateran Palace came into his possession around 311; Constantine gave it to the Church in 313, and it became the seat of the bishops of Rome from that time.

In Rome, Constantine supervised not only the construction of the Basilica of the Savior (the Lateran) but also a further nine basilicas, including Old St. Peter's (Rome), St. Paul Outside the Walls (Rome), The Holy Sepulchre (Jerusalem), and The Nativity (Bethlehem).

The Lateran quickly became the center of ecclesial life—early on, a meeting of bishops was held there to discuss the Donatist controversy.

The popes lived at the Lateran from the 4th century until the 14th century, when the papacy moved to Avignon, France, in 1309. Two fires — in 1309 and 1361 — badly damaged the Lateran complex, so when the papacy returned to Rome from Avignon in 1378, the popes shifted their residence and court to the Vatican. The official cathedral, though, remained at the Lateran. Thus the Vatican has been the residence of the popes for only about 600 years. The popes lived at the Lateran for nearly 1,000 years.

The old Lateran basilica was torn down in the 16th century and rebuilt in its current state; the current façade was completed in 1735. Of the Constantine building, the two columns at the left and right of the ciborium have survived.

Just as Vatican I and Vatican II were held where the pope lived in the 19th and 20th centuries, five ecumenical councils were held at the Lateran when the popes lived there. The First Lateran Council was held in 1119. Lateran V was held 1512-1517 and was not a successful venture; the Protestant Reformation began as it ended.

The 1929 treaty between the Republic of Italy and the Holy See, which regulated the end of the Papal States and created the Vatican City State, was signed at the Lateran and is known as the Lateran Treaty.

Still Standing

The Lateran is a visible expression the Church's passage through history. Battered and damaged, reformed and rebuilt — she stands. The Lateran — near the Roman city walls — has been sacked many times by invading armies. The most recent attack upon it was in July 1993, when the rear portico was bombed by the mafia in reaction to St. John Paul the Great's condemnation of the mafia in Sicily in May of that year.

Most of ravages of the Lateran have been due to fires, floods and the deterioration of time — walls bulging out, foundations eroding. So it has been repaired, rebuilt — even entirely reconstructed — several times. The Lateran doesn't look like it used to, but has the same identity and mission.

Several notable features have endured. The great doors of the Lateran are taken from the Roman Forum. Likely the most ancient part of the complex, the doors indicate that while the Roman Empire is long extinct, what survives of it is that which was taken up in the life of the Church.

Beneath its high altar rests the remains of the small wooden table on which, according to tradition, St. Peter celebrated Mass.

The basilica conserves the Pope's "cathedra", the sign of his being a "pastor." The ritual of the election of every new pope still concludes with enthronement in this cathedra. The pontiff journeys from Saint Peter's in procession, and is seated on the cathedra, surrounded by all the clergy of Rome, who pray for him and applaud him.

One of the jewels of the Lateran is the Constantinian Cross, also known as the Lateran Cross. Produced between the thirteenth and fourteenth century, it was used at the opening of papal processions, alongside the two candles that accompanied it. The gilded silver plates that compose the cross are engraved with the entire Genesis cycle and the New Testament episodes that echo it.

Relics of the Passion

The most valuable part of the Lateran is no longer housed within it. Just a few years after its dedication in 324, St. Helena, mother of Constantine, traveled to Jerusalem and returned with the relics of the Passion.

Some of those relics are now kept across the street from the Lateran, including the Scala Santa — the "Holy Steps" from Pilate's praetorium. A short walk takes the pilgrim to the Basilica of the Holy Cross in Jerusalem, so named because it is meant to bring Jerusalem to Rome, as it were. There are kept relics of the True Cross, as well as instruments of the Passion — fragments of the nails, thorns and scourging pillar.

Papal Tombs

Six papal tombs are in the Lateran today. More popes had been buried there in the first millennium but their graves were lost over time. Two tombs are of special note.

Innocent III (1198-1216) reigned when St. Francis of Assisi came to Rome to establish his new order. Innocent was initially skeptical that the radicalism of the Franciscan proposal was practical. As he was considering the matter, Innocent had a dream in which he saw Francis holding up the Lateran basilica. Convinced that this was a sign that Francis was needed to support a Church in need of reform, Innocent gave his approval in 1210.

Pope Leo XIII (1878-1903) is also entombed at the Lateran, the last pope not to be buried at St. Peter's. (Pope Francis also chose to be buried elsewhere, at St. Mary Major, a place he has visited more than 100 times, as the Holy Father goes there before and after every papal trip.)

Leo came to the papacy while the question of the Papal States was still unresolved. Consequently, he never left the Vatican during his long 25-year papacy. Knowing that a bishop belongs in his cathedral, he was determined to get there in death if he could not do so in life.

Such is the importance of the Lateran, the cathedral of the whole world, as it enters its 18th century of service.

The De Profundis (Psalm 129/130)

The De Profundis ("of the depths") is the famous Psalm 130 of anguish and sorrow for sins, set to music by many great composers. It is a penitential psalm that is used by the Roman Catholic Church, sung as part of Vespers (evening prayer), in Masses for the dead, in prayer for the Holy Souls in Purgatory (the Church Suffering), and to express remorse for our faults to Christ, a beautiful expression of repentance.

Out of the depths I have cried to Thee, O Lord:

Lord, hear my voice.

Let Thy ears be attentive to the voice of my supplication.

If Thou, O Lord, wilt mark iniquities:

Lord, who shall stand it?

For with Thee there is merciful forgiveness:

and by reason of thy law, I have waited for Thee, O Lord.

My soul hath relied on His word,

my soul hath hoped in the Lord.

From the morning watch even until night,

let Israel hope in the Lord.

Because with the Lord there is mercy:

and with him plentiful redemption.

And he shall redeem Israel from all his iniquities.

V/. Lord, hear my prayer.

R/. And let my cry come unto Thee.

V/. Let us pray. O God, the Creator and Redeemer of all the faithful; grant to the souls of Thy servants departed the remission of all their sins, that by our devout supplications they may obtain that pardon which they have always desired. Who livest and reignest world without end.

R/. Amen.

V/. Eternal rest grant unto them, O Lord.

R/. And let perpetual light shine upon them.

V/. May the souls of the faithful departed, through the mercy of God, rest in peace.

R/. Amen.

"The family that prays together, stays together."
